

Educational Apps for Mobile Devices

Intel® Teach Elements: Moving into Mobile Learning

The sites listed below can help you find educational app reviews and recommendations.

- APPitic

<http://www.appitic.com/> *

Educational app reviews by Apple Distinguished Educators. These apps have been tested in different grade levels with a variety of instructional strategies. The app database is organized into unique learning categories, such as critical thinking and interpersonal intelligence.

- AppySmarts

<http://www.appysmarts.com/> *

A review of apps designed for students in preschool–third grade. Apps are reviewed for educational value and are given an overall score based out of 100. Each review includes pros, cons, and recommended age level. Also includes a five-star rating system for graphic quality and length of play, as well as information about ads and in-app purchases.

- Common Sense Media App Reviews

<http://www.commonsensemedia.org/app-reviews> *

A searchable database of app reviews by age, subject, skill, topic, genre, and rating. You can also browse for apps that have won awards, been recommended by parents, or selected by the editors. Each app review includes a learning rating based on educational content, as well as the recommended age level and available platforms.

- Mind Leap

<http://www.mindleaptech.com/> *

Educational app reviews built on a five-star rating scale. Reviews include a wide range of subjects and are divided by grade level. Each review offers a breakdown of statistics such as educational quality, engagement factor, and shelf life.

- Mobile iEducator

<http://mobileieducator.com/> *

Comprehensive reviews of educational apps, reviews are written by educators. Apps are reviewed based on a five-star scale, and many include ideas for classroom activities. Apps are organized by grade level and topic.

- Teachers With Apps

<http://teacherswithapps.com/> *

An app resource site with lists of apps that have been vetted by veteran teachers. Apps are listed by grade level and include a detailed review. Only recommended apps are listed on the site.