Help the humanoid race survive, Defender. Armed aliens of all kinds have surrounded our planet. One by one, alien Landers swoop down to snatch up our stunned humanoid race. Only your sophisticated Defender ship can rescue humanoid hostages . . . before they turn into double-crossing Mutants that come back to kill—you!

Right now, there are only ten humanoids left on the planet. When a humanoid is kidnapped by an alien Lander, you must destroy the Lander immediately, and rescue the hostage. The choice is yours—you can let the falling humanoid float back to the planet. (Beware, though. A humanoid can fall to its death.) Or you can catch the falling humanoid and carry it back yourself.

Watch out! Trailing the Landers are armies of alien reinforcements. You're up against the Bombers, Baiters, Mutants, and the perilous Pods and their very own Swarms.

Baiters watch the clock and wait until you take too long to finish an attack wave. When they want to, Baiters move faster than you do.

Mutants are programmed to kill. They go after your whole ship. Pods are alien commandos that control all operations. If you kill a Pod, it releases Swarms—sneaky ships that follow your every impulse.

To fight back, Defender is armed with a laser gun and two powerful options . . . Smart Bombs and Hyperspace. Smart Bombs obliterate every alien in sight, and still earn you points. (Use them sparingly, though. You have just three Smart Bombs to start, and one more each 10,000 points.) And Hyperspace is an easy but often dangerous way out because it kills you 25% of the time! By the way, it's best to fly low. Good Defender players cruise about two inches above the planet to protect their humanoids.

To survive an alien attack wave, you must destroy every alien except the Baiter. Every fifth wave, you are awarded new humanoids. Wave after wave gets harder and harder.

Can you arrest these aliens before they kidnap every last humanoid? We hope so 'cause when the last humanoid is gone, so is our planet and life as we know it.
